

To Whom It May Concern:

As a Director/Producer and supervisor of Bethany Sanderson, I am sending you a letter to describe my reaction to her work. I am a freelance music video and documentary producer and I oversaw Bethany as an intern at my own company. It delights me to recommend her as a choice candidate for your company.

Bethany's passion for all aspects of film making are evident when you meet her. She is primarily interested in becoming better, and so this is reflected in her attitude. She understands the value of praise and critique, and uses all feedback to guide her in building her career. Bethany is able to follow direction, but is also able to find work when she is left unattended. As a busy person, I always appreciated that Bethany could be left alone and accomplish a great amount of work in my absence.

Most of the work Bethany did with my company was in the area of post production. I used her as an assistant-editor on several projects and soon was comfortable allowing her to edit work for my own directing reel. Bethany enjoys being tasked with opportunities that allow her to flex a muscle of creative control. It is my opinion that she should be given these opportunities and that she is someone worth investing in, and pushing to become better and better. She has a lot of natural instinct as a storyteller and her talent grew over the course of our internship.

Bethany also got a lot of onset experience during her internship. On one music video shoot, she stepped up and was able to wear 4 hats in 2 days: on-set media technician, 2nd Assistant Director (on prep day), on-set Photographer, and PA. Bethany is dependable and can be counted on to adapt to new situations. Whenever I tasked Bethany with a job she was unfamiliar with, she used resources such as the internet and her contacts in order to find out how to do the job well; she never slowed me down with unnecessary questions.

Based on our internship, I highly recommend Bethany for any job requiring initiative, creativity, working with others or working alone. I would be happy to answer any further questions over the phone.

Warm Regards,

Erin Brown
